The future of the child with Autism is shaped better the earlier it receives ASD Therapy. The benefits of Early Intervention is not limited to just a few selected kids and it can be even possible that the children may get equipped with skills enough to join schooling with other normal children.

When we are referring to early intervention the prime focus will be on developmental aspects in children like communication and social skills to begin with.

Best Autism Therapy Near Me - Capaar4autism

Lot of studies have shown over the years that Early Intervention as much as 24 months prior to schooling can bring in various improvements in smaller aged children than a slightly delayed one.

Since ASD (Autism Spectrum Disorder) is characterized by either excess or too little of particular behavioural traits the goal is to enhance the subdued skills and restrict the bad or harmful behavioural aspects with the help of therapies. So naturally behavioural therapy comes on top among others like occupational therapy and speech therapies.

Applied Behavioural Analysis (ABA)

Applied Behavioural Analysis (ABA)

It is a type of treatment for Autism which is designed on behavioural theories. In simple words a technique that says desired behaviours can be put to learning through a systematic rewards and consequences system.

This systematic technique encourages positive behavior patterns and discourages negative behaviours patterns. And the best part is it makes them learn new skill sets and empowers them to apply those skills to newer situations they face.

Early Intensive Behavioural Intervention (EIBI)

Early Intensive Behavioural Intervention (EIBI)

It is a sub type of Applied Behavioural Analysis.

EIBI makes use of the principles of behaviour analysis to encourage positive behaviour patterns and discourage the negative or non-useful/harmful ones such as tantrums, display of aggression, and acts of self-injury. It is perfectly structured approach for teaching children under the age of five.

Pivotal Response Training (PRT)

Discrete Trial Teaching (DTT)

DTT is one of the types of ABA techniques that break down skills into small, “discrete” actionable items or parts.

While the trainer picks skills to teach one by one it's common to use few tangible rewards whenever a desired behaviour pattern is displayed by the child.

Speech Therapy (ST)

Speech Therapy (ST)

As we know children with ASD face challenges in social communication, speech therapy plays a significant role in helping them. Speech therapy helps in addressing these problems associated to language and communication. It focuses on improvement of aspects like verbal, nonverbal, and social communication.

Speech Therapy

(ST)

Children with Autism Spectrum Disorder speech therapy can benefit greatly since the pathologists not only works with the child, they also involve the social network around the child the teachers, family members and even those children whom he identifies as friends to have the therapy designed and working in the most natural settings possible.

When it comes to children who are mostly non verbal; tools like use of gestures, sign language, and picture communication programs are often highly beneficial to promote development of verbal communication skills in them

Occupational Therapy (OT)

Occupational Therapy (OT)

The Occupational therapist study children to see if they are able to perform tasks which children of their age are expected to do. For example how they get dressed or use tools like scissors and even utensils.

This therapy focuses on the sensory integration issues in relation to Autism. And they help children with such by detailed identification and development of those skills gradually during the therapy.

Physical Therapy (PT)
