

HOW TO FIND AN AUTISM SPECIALIST NEAR ME?

WRITTEN BY

DR. P. SUMITHA HEMAVATHY (PT)

Founder & Director - CAPAAR

If you or a loved one has been diagnosed with autism, one common question you will have is, “What are the treatments available?” Autism is a disorder which can’t be cured completely but its symptoms can be managed by the help of intervention therapies. Finding a specialist who treats autism is easy but there are some important factors to keep in mind then you can get relief from autism symptoms.

WHAT IS AN AUTISM SPECIALIST?

The word “autism specialist” can be described in different professionals and there are many other jobs that are much similar or refer to the work a which the specialist does. Instead of looking for someone who has a specific title of “autism specialist,” find an individual who is educated, and has more knowledge about intervention methods that support individuals with autism.

WHAT IS AN AUTISM SPECIALIST?

Common intervention methods such as:

- Applied Behavioral Analysis (ABA)
- Occupational Therapy
- Speech Therapy or Communicative therapy
- Relationship Development Intervention
- Sensory Integration Therapy

Most intervention facilities have different varieties of professionals which includes developmental specialists, counselors, speech/communicative therapists, physical therapists, behavioral therapist and many more like this and these individuals will provide intervention within their scope. People look for professionals with a degree in psychology, education, Applied Behavior Analysis, speech and hearing sciences and related fields.

There are some educational programs offered for professionals to become Certified Autism Specialists, and whereas this is not a title that gets applied to all individuals who provide intervention services. Apart from specific professional area or title, the one thing these professionals have similarity in training targeted towards helping people with autism.

WHAT DOES AN AUTISM SPECIALIST DO?

WHAT DOES AN AUTISM SPECIALIST DO?

Autism specialists will work for the people who have been diagnosed with autism and help them to improve and manage their social behavior and communication skills. They manage and improve them by creating intervention or treatment plans, teaching and implementing intervention strategies and supporting them in reaching their treatment goals. Their duty is to help a person with autism live without depending on others by giving them strategies for everyday success appropriate to their level of need.

Autism specialists can work in different varieties, like some are a part of private practices, where clients drive for treatment. Others see their clients in the home, school or public places too. The most important role of an autism specialist revolves around supporting the client and their family. They may give information about resources in the community, education about evidence-based practices or strategies or they might even connect their clients to other professionals that can offer services outside of

HOW DO I FIND AN AUTISM SPECIALIST NEAR ME?

HOW DO I FIND AN AUTISM SPECIALIST NEAR ME?

You can find an autism specialist nearby in various ways including:

- Doctor Referrals

Once your doctor treated you for autism, they will refer you to a facility who will provide intervention services. Some facilities work only with children under the age group of 3 and that is commonly called, “early intervention services” and there are some programs specialized in school-aged children or adults only. Depending on the age of the patient-doctor will refer you to a facility.

- Internet Search

A simple search on the internet for “autism specialist near me” will give you many results in major cities. If you choose to independent search for a provider be sure about the specification of what you are looking for. Sometimes they might casually refer to themselves as “support services” or to improve a business name which doesn’t directly apply to autism. Once you have a shortlist the facilities, ring them and ask more about their background and services.

- Support Groups

Now a day's in most of the places have support groups for autism patients or even for those who take care of someone with autism. Attend such support group meetings where you get referrals easily. People undergone the treatment will give you better advice about the provider and helps in choosing wisely.

- Local Schools

If your child has been diagnosed with autism, then the public school setting can offer your child much support which they need because the staff over there are with developmental specialists, speech and occupational therapists and many more. Try to find such more resources available in the locations where your child is already a part of.

WHAT TO KEEP IN MIND?

When looking for the right autism specialist to help an autism patient and their family members there are a few helpful tips to keep in mind. Make sure that you understand these important points before you start treatment with any provider.

- Cost

There are some providers who accept insurance and some do not. Think about your financial responsibility before you commit to any services. Some intervention services will take place 2-3 times in a week or even more also, depending on the needs of the client, which results in major medical bills that add up very quickly.

- Location of Care

There are some facilities who send autism specialists to your home or even to child's school also to provide intervention services. Whereas some providers require you to travel to their location. Choose the location of care according to your convenience. If your child is affected by severe autism, then traveling to their location might make the experience more challenging for everyone involved in this.

- Investigate

Don't hesitate to ask about the education and qualifications of the professionals who will work for the patient. Feel free to do little more investigation and check the accreditation and credentials of the facility whom you choose to. Treatment will be as good as the provider so, a little investigation is required.

- Connection

Make sure there is a positive connection between the provider and autism patient who will be taking treatment. The provider should be patient, empathetic and knowledgeable. If there is no good connection between them both then treatment will become a little difficult.

Finding a specialist who treats autism is not difficult. But the difficulty is only that you find the best among the options you have according to your requirements.

If you are treated for autism or care for someone affected by this disorder, reach to capaar4autism.com today, there are many things which help to manage your health condition. We provide the extra help and support to people who are suffering from autism disorder that helps you and your loved one to overcome day-to-day challenges.

CAPAAR

GET UP! GET HERE! GET WELL!

Dr. P. Sumitha Hemavathy (PT)

Founder & Director

(CAPAAR)

Centre for Advanced Pediatric
And Adult Rehabilitation

CONCLUSION

To Know More

Let's Connect

◆ www.capaar4autism.com ◆